This course, offered every spring through the Institute for the Liberal Arts, is an always changing exploration of the human experience, team taught by graduate student instructors from the humanities, the social sciences and the sciences, under the guidance of Dr. Rose Deighton-Mohammed as an ILA faculty mentor.

As part of an interdisciplinary teaching team, you will learn methodological and pedagogical approaches that will continue to inform your teaching throughout your career.

Members of the teaching team will meet twice during the Fall semester to discuss the specifics of the course to be offered Spring 2023, Monday/Wednesday 2:30pm-3:45pm. All members of the teaching team will share responsibilities for all aspects of the course, including developing the topics, syllabus, readings, presentations, leading class discussions and group activities and designing and grading assignments.

TO APPLY: Submit CV and a brief statement explaining how your research relates to the question "What does it mean to be human?" online by November 4, 2022
